

EDITOR'S CHOICE

Mary E. Northridge, PhD, MPH, Editor-in-Chief, AJPH and Deborah Holtzman, Department Editor, AJPH

As a way to acknowledge contributions to the AJPH, the Editor-in-Chief developed a process whereby individuals could be recognized for their roles as authors or reviewers of recently published papers. Two categories of awards were established. The first is the AJPH Paper of the Year. This award recognizes a published paper that substantially contributes to our knowledge and understanding of an important public health issue or has advanced a given public health policy or program. Criteria for selection include a paper that addresses an important and timely public health issue; is innovative, offering new knowledge or insights; has the potential to have a significant public health impact; and advances public health.

The second category is the AJPH Reviewer of the Year, which was established to recognize reviewers who have done the most to strengthen a paper or papers prior to publication. Specifically, this award recognizes reviewers who are willing to devote their time, care, and expertise to enhance the quality of the papers we publish in the service of public health. To the exceptional individuals listed below—including all of the peer reviewers who so generously gave of their time and expertise to critically evaluate AJPH papers in their areas of expertise over the past 2 years—we extend our heartfelt thanks. ■

YEAR 2011 AJPH PAPER OF THE YEAR AWARD WINNERS

Zeng Y, Gu D, Purser J, Hoeing H, Christakis N. Associations of environmental factors with elderly health and mortality in China. *Am J Public Health. 2010;100(2):298–305

In “Associations of Environmental Factors With Elderly Health and Mortality in China,” based on a national sample of more than 15 000 people and controlling for some personal characteristics, Zeng et al. found significant relationships between mortality and indicators of quality of life with per capita local gross domestic product, illiteracy, labor force participation, air pollution, and several other predictors. This ecological study underscores the stresses faced by elderly populations living in rapidly urbanizing and industrializing economies. ■

Greene JA, Herzberg D. Hidden in plain sight: marketing prescription drugs to consumers in the twentieth century. *Am J Public Health. 2010;100(5):793–803

This extremely surprising and stunningly original article is impressively researched and beautifully written and illustrated. Here's a snippet from the abstract:

[T]oday's omnipresent [direct-to-consumer] ads are only the most recent chapter in a longer history of DTC pharmaceutical promotion (including the ghostwriting of popular articles, organization of public-relations events, and implicit advertising of products to consumers) stretching back over the twentieth century. We use trade literature and archival materials to examine the continuity of efforts to promote prescription drugs to consumers and to better grapple with the public health significance of contemporary pharmaceutical marketing practices.

Obviously, the authors have focused on a critically important topic, and they deliver a wonderful article that should become a citation classic. ■

Malebranche DJ, Arriola KJ, Jenkins TR, Dauria E, Patel SN. Exploring the 'bisexual bridge': a qualitative study of risk behavior and disclosure of same-sex behavior among Black bisexual men. Am J Public Health. 2010;100(1):159-164

This well-executed qualitative study provides a framework for understanding key issues among a group (Black bisexual men) for whom a lack of understanding has done much to hinder HIV prevention efforts across the United States. Malebranche et al. describe how a “decisional-balance theoretical construct from the Transtheoretical Model and Stages of Change schema” can help us understand how Black bisexual men make decisions regarding disclosure of same-sex sexual activity, sexual behavior generally, and condom use in particular. All HIV/AIDS behavioral researchers and prevention workers can use the well-written descriptions of the decision-making processes of Black bisexual men in this article to develop and improve the effectiveness of HIV prevention efforts in this population, and the population as a whole. ■

Rothman SM, Raveis VH, Friedman A, Rothman DJ. Health advocacy organizations and the pharmaceutical industry: an analysis of disclosure practices. Am J Public Health. 2011;101(4):602-609

This cogent analytic essay by Rothman et al. generated more correspondence than any other article the last two decades of

AJPH. It changed the way the public health community views disclosure practices and argued for greater transparency regarding health advocacy organization (HAO) funding. The authors concluded,

As highly trusted organizations, HAOs should disclose all corporate grants, including the purpose and the amount. Absent this disclosure, legislators, regulators, and the public cannot evaluate possible conflicts of interest or biases in HAO advocacy. ■

Hallfors D, Cho H, Rusakaniko S, Iritani B, Mapfumo J, Halpern C. Supporting adolescent orphan girls to stay in school as HIV risk prevention: evidence from a randomized controlled trial in Zimbabwe. Am J Public Health. 2011;101(6):1082-1088

Thirty years into the HIV/AIDS pandemic, the health, economic, and sociocultural costs continue to disproportionately impact the lives of young women and girls in sub-Saharan Africa. In this article, Hallfors et al. provide further evidence that supporting access to basic primary and secondary education for the most vulnerable segment of the society— orphaned girls—can reduce disparities in HIV risk. These findings serve as a compelling reminder that a sound education not only can reduce social and economic inequities but can provide girls with an opportunity to live healthy and productive lives. ■

YEAR 2011 AJPH REVIEWER OF THE YEAR AWARD WINNERS

We gratefully recognize Steven M. Albert, PhD, MA, MSPH, for his outstanding service in the broad area of public health and aging. He submitted timely and thoughtful reviews of 5 distinct papers over the past 2 years (2 on the same day!). In his reviews, he helpfully includes the critical point in the confidential editor comments, and carefully lays out for the author how the paper might be made more useful to the public health community. ■

We are pleased to recognize J. Felipe Garcia-España, PhD, a biostatistician and demographer. In his reviews and, in some instances, re-reviews, Dr. Garcia-España has offered critically constructive comments that carefully and methodically present clear, objective, and astute critiques of the manuscripts assigned to him. His contributions and service to the Journal help to maintain the scientific rigor and public health impact of the papers published in AJPH. Finally, we are incredibly grateful for the timeliness in which he has provided his feedback! ■

We also recognize Allan Brandt, PhD. Dr. Brandt is the author of the award-winning book, The Cigarette Century (New York, NY: Basic Books; 2007) and has become a go-to reviewer for any submission in the area of smoking, tobacco products, etc. He invariably delivers an extraordinarily careful, thoughtful, judicious, and helpful review, and has thus helped the editors make difficult decisions about submissions and, often resubmissions, and to work with authors to improve their papers. He has also helped in similar ways with reviews on several other topics, notably on the history of public health as profession in the 20th century. Allan has done this very generously while serving in the very demanding role as Dean of Graduate Studies at Harvard, a “reward” for the publication of the major book on the tobacco industry. ■

YEAR 2012 AJPH PAPER OF THE YEAR AWARD WINNERS

Adamkiewicz G, Zota AR, Fabian P, et al. Moving environmental justice indoors: understanding structural influences on residential exposure patterns in low-income communities. *Am J Public Health. 2011;101(suppl 1):S238-S245

We spend the vast majority of our time inside buildings, and the most vulnerable populations spend nearly all their time indoors. Adamkiewicz et al. use theory and modeling to demonstrate marked disparities in contaminant exposures inside dwellings, and this article is a reminder that confining environmental justice concerns to the outside misses a larger source of inequity. ■

Braveman PA, Kumanyika S, Fielding J, et al. Health disparities and health equity: the issue is justice. *Am J Public Health. 2011;101(suppl 1):S149-S155

This essay was unanimously endorsed for publication in the December 2011 supplement devoted to Environmental Justice and Disparities in Environmental Health, even though it was submitted through the regular online process. It provides a clear reminder about the importance of reaffirming the core values of public health. As the authors conclude, “It is time to be explicit that the heart of a commitment to addressing health disparities is a commitment to achieving a more just society.” ■

Weisz G. Epidemiology and health care reform: the National Health Survey of 1935–1936. Am J Public Health. 2011;101(3):438–447

George Weisz is a major historian. His most recent work focuses on the scientific, epidemiological, and cultural reasons for the differing recognition of chronic disease in different countries, and has been particularly alert to the subtle professional-political dimensions. In this wonderful, insight-filled paper, Weisz explores the work of a small group of reform-minded epidemiologists led by Edgar Sydenstricker who were behind the US National Health Survey in 1935 and 1936, which was also the first national survey to focus on chronic disease and disability. He argues very persuasively that the underlying motivation to conduct this survey was to promote health care reform in the United States by focusing on morbidity rather than on mortality. The latter rates continued to decrease even during the Depression, but the focus on growing chronic disease morbidity was an effective way to highlight the poor health of many in the country and to demonstrate the strong connections between poverty and illness. Weisz's paper thus presents very novel historical insights about what is now recognized as a major public health problem whose importance is still growing. ■

We are pleased to recognize Sara S. Metcalf, PhD. Dr. Metcalf critiques geographic and systems science papers for

AJPH and—as with most outstanding reviewers—publishes notable papers in these same arenas. While providing technically astute comments, Dr. Metcalf focuses her reviews on the core content and is unfailingly supportive of the crux of the work. Moreover, she demonstrates respect for the authors and interest in advancing public health. Thanks to the dedication of Dr. Metcalf and her peers, AJPH publishes leading research on structural and environmental determinants of health utilizing systems science approaches. ■

We also recognize Rima Apple, PhD, now a professor emeritus at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. For several years, including 2011, Dr. Apple has contributed at least three to six stellar manuscript reviews per year. AJPH can with full confidence count on Dr. Apple to respond willingly to invitations to review and to produce within a short turn-around time invariably thoughtful, balanced, and diplomatically stated analyses. ■
