

A randomized controlled trial of botulinum toxin A for treating neuropathic pain in patients with spinal cord injury: Retraction

The article, “A randomized controlled trial of botulinum toxin A for treating neuropathic pain in patients with spinal cord injury”,^[1] which appeared in Volume 96, Issue 20 of Medicine, has been retracted for plagiarism and academic fraud. Similar design study, language, and tables were found in a previously published article, “Botulinum toxin type A for neuropathic pain in patients with spinal cord injury”,^[2] which appeared in Volume 79, Issue 4 of Annals of Neurology, without any attribution or citation.

References

- [1] Li G, Lv C, Tian L. A randomized controlled trial of botulinum toxin A for treating neuropathic pain in patients with spinal cord injury. Medicine. 96;20:e6919.
- [2] Han Z, Song D-H, O H-M. Botulinum toxin type A for neuropathic pain in patients with spinal cord injury. Annals of Neurology. 79;4:569–578.