Interpretation of Network Diagrams

Netbase Quid™ artificial intelligence text analytics and natural language processing (NLP) software algorithms have previously been described and utilized to analyze patient perspectives and experiences of breast cancer, atopic dermatitis, and tardive dyskinesia.<sup>1-3</sup> In brief, within a network diagram, each patient post was represented by a node, and posts with similar language were clustered together and connected. Color-coded clusters of nodes represented the different topics discussed, and the density of the clusters indicated how similar or diverse the posts were within the cluster. The nodes/posts that were centrally located contained language that was shared across multiple clusters, and thus represented core concepts. The clusters on the periphery represented niche topics that were not representative of the larger landscape. Greater distances between the clusters indicated a low number of interrelated posts, and a bridging node between 2 clusters indicated a post at an intersection between 2 concepts. The NLP algorithm used the Louvain method<sup>4</sup> to group posts by common topics based on shared similar language. Themes were mapped using a combination of keyword identification and grouping with input from the analysis team. All proprietary treatment names were replaced with generic names.

Supplementary Table 1. Flare-related keywords.

Flare-related posts, including those from the same author pre- and postflare, were identified from posts written by patients with UC on 8 online public forums in 6 different countries due to the inclusion of keywords. Posts were stratified by region (United States and European countries [France, Germany, Italy, Spain, and the United Kingdom]) and topics were identified and ranked by a combined weighted score of volume (40%), unique authors (20%), negative sentiment (15%), betweenness centrality (15%), and recency (10%). UC, ulcerative colitis.
