

Figure S4. The theoretical sensitivity to identify postzygotic single-nucleotide mutations (pSNMs) with varied minor allele fraction, sequencing depth, and base quality. The base quality was set as 30 (A) and 60 (B). The sensitivity to detect pSNMs increased when either the sequencing depth or the base quality increased.

