Additional Searches

We additionally conducted an online search for professional societies and organisations within the fields of Internal Medicine, Nephrology, Endocrinology and Intensive Care Medicine to identify published guidelines or consensus statements.

These searches were conducted with the Google Chrome web browser using the following strategy:

We first tried to find international societies for each of the disciplines and searched their member societies if a website was provided. If a website was not provided we entered the provided name of the society in the web browser and scanned the first 10 citations. In addition we retrieved a list of the countries of the world from <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/index.html> (accessed on 02/04/2013) and entered each name on the list in combination with the field name and the words 'society' and 'association' and scanned the first 10 citations. An example of the search:

Belgium AND (Nephrology) AND (Society OR Association)

We searched the website of the identified societies, if a uniform resource locator was identified. If a website included a search utility, we searched for guidelines and consensus statements on hyponatraemia by sequentially entering the search terms 'hyponatraemia' and 'hyponatremia'. If the language used on the website was not English, we entered a search term for hyponatraemia in the appropriate language. We screened all citations thus retrieved. If a website did not provide a search function, we manually screened the website to identify guidance documents.

Finally, we conducted a 'liberal' search of the internet using the strategy (hyponatraemia OR hyponatremia) AND Guideline and screened the first 100 citations.

The included table below shows the identified societies, a uniform resource locator, the date on which the site was accessed, the search strategy used and the number of citations retrieved and the number of guidance documents withheld. EN conducted all additional searches. EN and JV examined all full-texts thus withheld for eligibility.
