I think one of the challenges that I face is an inner struggle with the fact that using an interpreter takes more time, which makes their care inherently more challenging. Which means when I get an admit that is a non-english speaking immigrant, I have to fight the feeling of wishing they spoke English.

I enjoy the variety of problems that they bring to clinic. I enjoy the aspect of creative problem solving to come up with solutions they can use. I find it challenging because that takes time and time is usually lacking in short clinic appointments and on busy inpatient services.

B. If you wish, please tell us about what you enjoy or do not enjoy about immigrant and refugee health care and the greatest challenges you face in caring for this population.

In the current healthcare system there are significant time constraints. One of my largest struggles comes from obtaining the appropriate information then, trying to diagnose and provide treatment plan recommendations in a limited time frame-and that is true even without the added complexity of an interpreter. This is a vulnerable population and I wish schedulers and insurance companies could see the advantage of giving certain patients more time.

I don't have a specific interest in caring for this population. I do feel that we have lots of great opportunities to learn about this often specialized care but often have the option of how in depth we want to take this learning.

Different perspectives and situations are interesting. Often immigrants are extraordinarily nice.

I do not enjoy that they sometimes expect free healthcare and presume that healthcare is not their responsibility.

B. If you wish, please tell us about what you enjoy or do not enjoy about immigrant and refugee health care and the greatest challenges you face in caring for this population.

I love working with immigrants and refugees as they tend to take a more active role in their health care, working across cultures is fun and rewarding in the stories you get to learn and the interesting people. That being said, it simply requires more time to ensure that both the doc and patient understand each other. Frequently something is miss understood which can lead to poorer care. I've wittnessed just about every reason - didn't know how to access inurance, didn't know how to do refills, wanted to do a spiritual ceremony first and this then put them out of the window to safely operate, etc. If given additional time, working with refugees/immigrants is really rewarding, when expected to do a good job but not being given the time needed to do a good job, it is frustrating.

B. If you wish, please tell us about what you enjoy or do not enjoy about immigrant and refugee health care and the greatest challenges you face in caring for this population.

Refugees and immigrants represent some of the least powerful people on this planet. Their lives have been displaced and after migrating to a new country and culture, stability is difficult to come by. Power grows out of being able to retain agency and autonomy. With health, that can be achieved, however if someone doesn't have that basic internal control over their lives it is difficult for them to achieve their dreams and goals. I believe health provides an excellent entry for improving someones life, especially in these populations, who commonly have had consistent structural and political violence levied against them. So I think healthcare provides them a first start at a new life, because it gives them agencies over their own bodies, and that's a start.

B. If you wish, please tell us about what you enjoy or do not enjoy about immigrant and refugee health care and the greatest challenges you face in caring for this population.

The needs of immigrants are different based off their personal and health histories. Much of the evidence for health screening is based on Western research and data. A medical provider must use independent thought and recognize the unique health needs of the person of which they are providing care. Immigrant health is both challenging and exciting in this way.

I like working with immigrant populations, although they do take more time, but it's often rewarding. I have run into problems with the interpreters being racist / biased against their own people, however, which is very worrisome, and I cannot control! I hate that I don't know exactly what the interpreter is telling the patient!

B. If you wish, please tell us about what you enjoy or do not enjoy about immigrant and refugee health care and the greatest challenges you face in caring for this population.

I enjoy taking care of immigrants because I, as a foreign born, know how hard it is to navigate the health care system. I would like to help them get the best care they could.

The greatest challenge is difficulty in communication. Despite the presence of professional interpreter, I found that many times, they do not understand treatment plan (or I did not effectively communicate with patients).

B. If you wish, please tell us about what you enjoy or do not enjoy about immigrant and refugee health care and the greatest challenges you face in caring for this population.

I enjoy hearing their stories but also being part of it. These folks have gone through so much, and have been victims of both willful and passive neglect. I think giving them another opportunity is incredibly satisfying, but also difficult. I don't want to slight them again, so making sure to be holistic and understanding requires even more energy and knowledge than I'd anticipate in a US born patient.

Side note:

Aa is difficult to answer because it asks me to rate multiple domains of patient care. I have received training in all domains but feel markedly more comfortable with cross cultural care than tropical and travel medicine.

Cf is also hard to answer. The SES, race, and cultural norms of a US born individual vary widely. I have a hard time conceiving of the "average" US born patient.

B. If you wish, please tell us about what you enjoy or do not enjoy about immigrant and refugee health care and the greatest challenges you face in caring for this population.

I enjoy taking care of immigrant patients, however the aspect that makes caring for them most difficult is the language barrier. I find it is difficult to use the interpreter phones, or the MARTI, and waiting for an interpreter is often disruptive to rounds.
