

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION

A combined case-control and molecular source attribution study of human Campylobacter infections in Germany, 2011-2014

Supplementary Figure S1: Minimum Spanning Tree generated from MLST comparisons of 816 C. jejuni and C. coli isolates from human study participants and from animals and food samples from the study region. Colouring according to strain source: blue, isolates from patients; green, isolates from animals; red, isolates from food samples. Numbers close to nodes indicate sequence types (STs). See Fig. 1 for a version with only the most abundant STs labelled.

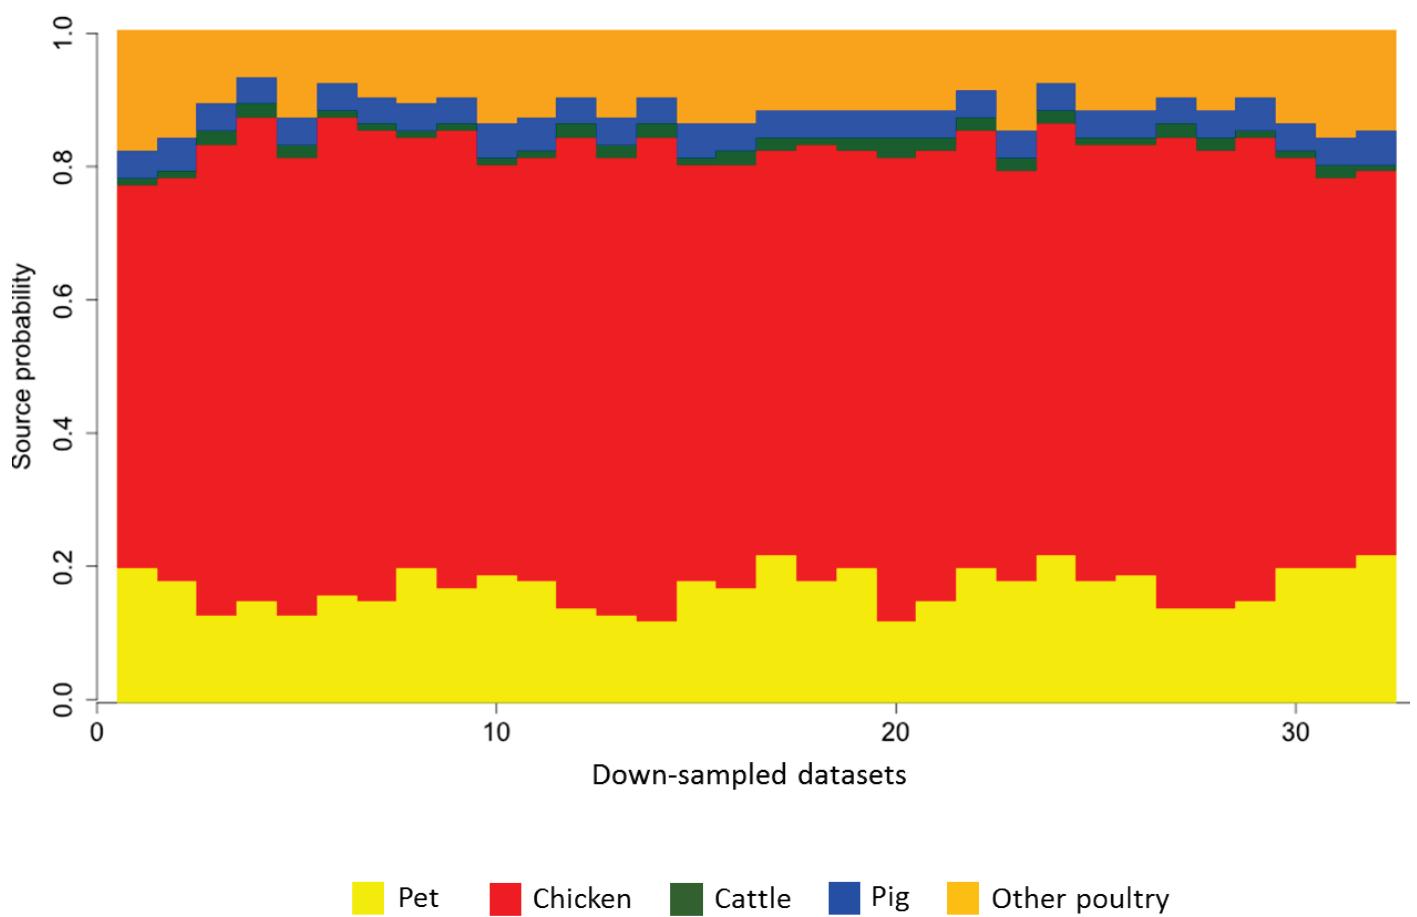

Supplementary Figure S2: Minimum Spanning Tree generated from MLST comparisons of 816 C. jejuni and C. coli isolates from human study participants and from animals and food samples from the study region. Colouring according to host species as specified in colour legend. Numbers close to nodes indicate sequence types (STs). See Fig. 2 for a version with only the most abundant STs labelled.

Supplementary Figure S3: Minimum Spanning Tree generated from MLST comparisons of 613 C. jejuni and C. coli isolates from human patients. Numbers close to nodes indicate sequence types. Colour coding according to travel history (outside of Germany) within 7 days prior to onset of symptoms: blue, no travel history; purple, recent travel.

Supplementary Figure S4: Minimum Spanning Tree generated from MLST comparisons of 80 C. jejuni and C. coli isolates from human patients who had travelled outside of Germany within 7 days prior to onset of symptoms. Numbers close to nodes indicate sequence types. Colour coding indicates destination of travel, see colour legend.

Supplementary Figure S5. Mean posterior source probability for human isolates (n=613) to originate from one of the 5 putative sources as determined by source attribution analysis with 32 down-sampled datasets. In each of the down-sampled datasets a random subsample of 10% of animal/food isolates was excluded to attribute the origin of the human isolates.

Supplementary Table S1. Factors positively associated (risk factors) and factors negatively associated with Campylobacter infections (international travellers included in analysis). Case-control study, Germany, 2011-2014. The proportion of exposed cases and controls is based on the number of cases and controls with complete answers in univariable analysis (without adjustment for age group, sex, federal state). Adjusted odds ratios (aOR) were determined in multivariable logistic regression analysis (adjusted for age group, sex, federal state; 1,110 cases and 2,719 controls with complete answers for all variables in final model).

Supplementary Table S2. Factors positively associated (risk factors) and factors negatively associated with Campylobacter infections attributed to the source chicken (posterior probability $P \geq 0.5$) by source attribution using asymmetric island modelling. Case-control study, Germany, 2011-2014. The proportion of exposed cases and controls is based on the number of cases and controls with complete answers in univariable analysis (without adjustment for age group, sex, federal state). Adjusted odds ratios (aOR) were determined in multivariable logistic regression analysis (adjusted for age group, sex, federal state; 307 cases and 2,751 controls with complete answers for all variables in final model).

Supplementary Table S3. MLST data and origin of animal and food isolates obtained during the study period (2011-2014) from samples taken in the study region through the FBI-Zoo-network (n=203; see Table 1, column 1). Isolates from pets, chickens, pigs, cattle and poultry other than chicken (ducks, geese, turkeys, quails) (n=188) were used for source attribution analysis, supplemented with MLST data from additional isolates obtained in Germany or in neighbouring countries.

Supplementary Table S4. MLST data and relative posterior source probability of 613 human Campylobacter* isolates obtained during the study period (2011-2014), according to sequence type.

As putative sources we considered pet, chicken, cattle, pig, and poultry other than chicken (duck, goose, turkey, quail: “other poultry”). Source probabilities were assigned using asymmetric island modelling.
