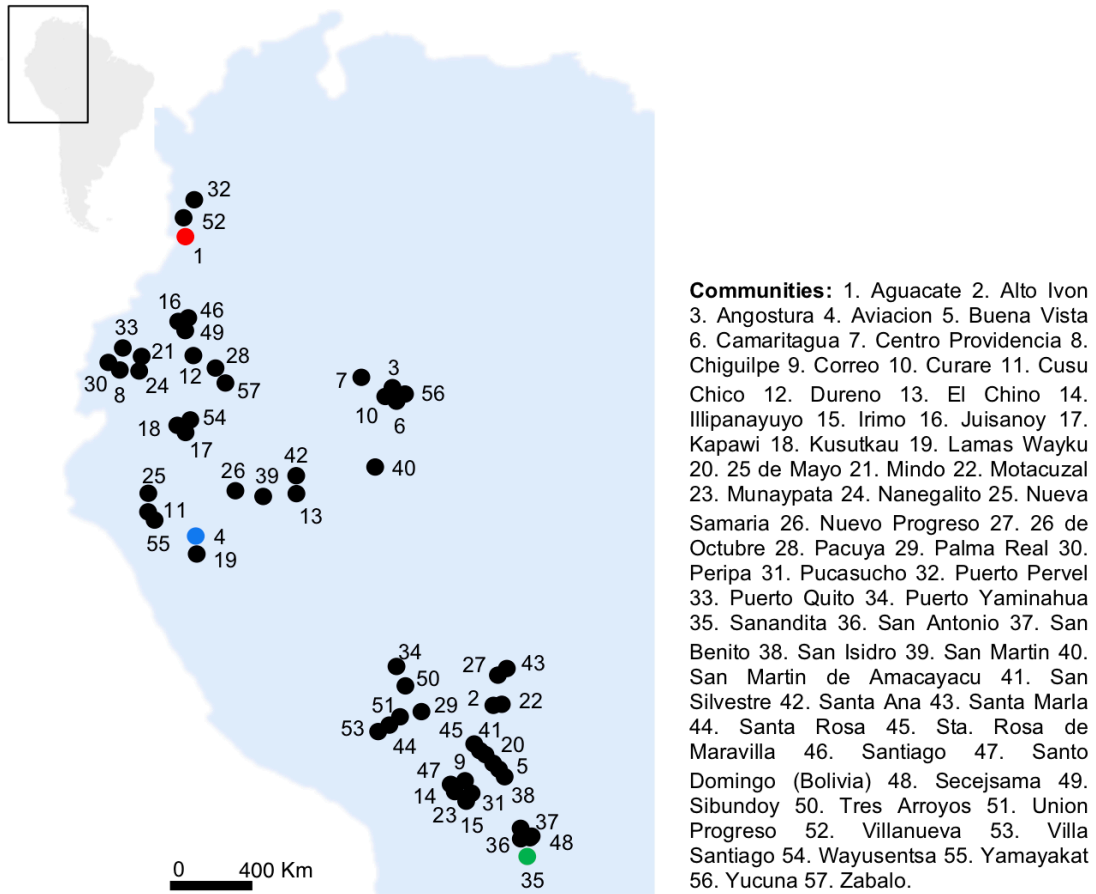

Fig. S1. Geographic distribution of the communities studied. Map of northwestern South America showing the geographic location and the names of the 57 communities.

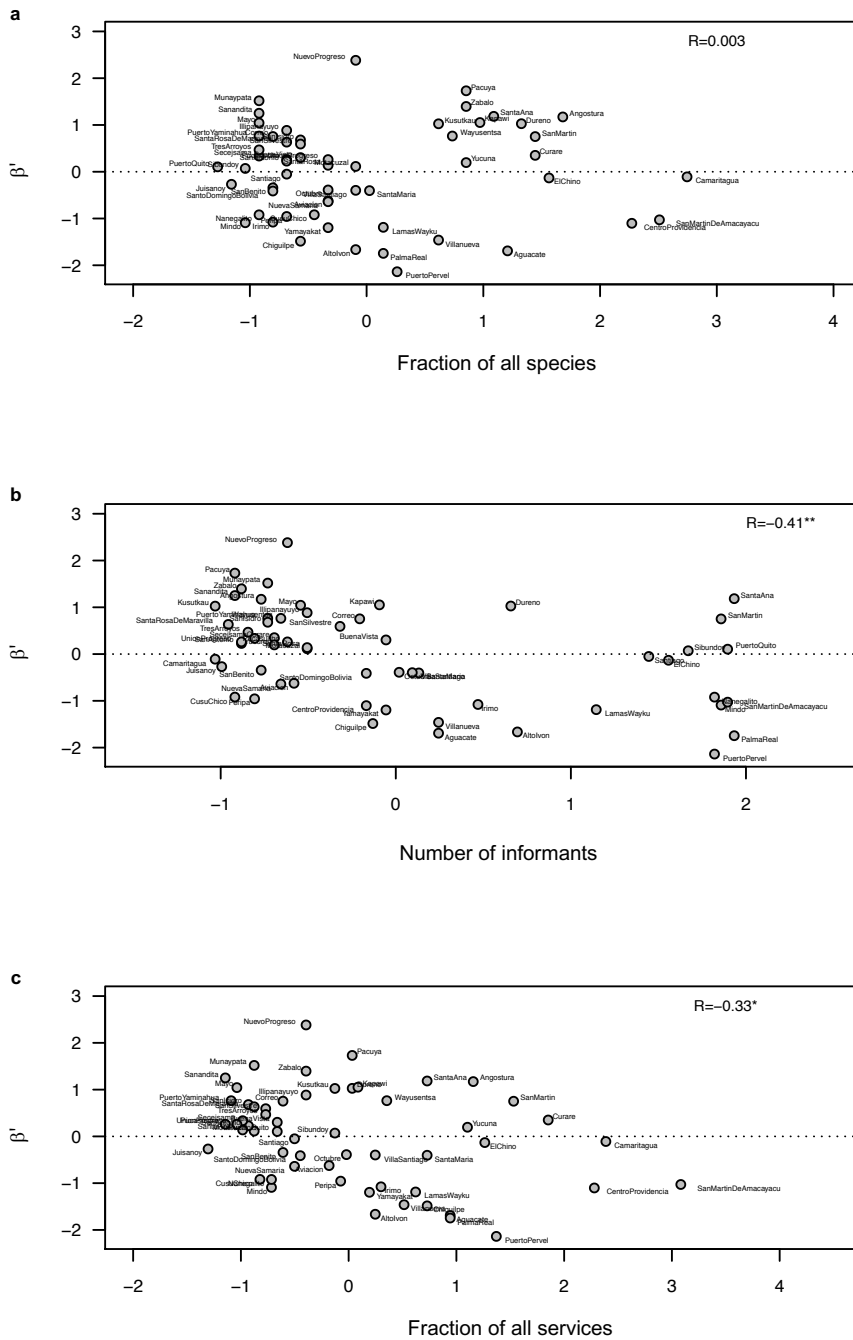

Fig. S2. How much a community differs from the metaweb (β') is unrelated to the (a) fraction of the regional species pool contained in the community, but is significantly related to the (b) number of informants in the community, and (c) fraction of all services contained in the community. All variables were standardized to a mean of 0 and standard deviation of 1. * ($P \leq 0.05$);  ($P \leq 0.01$).

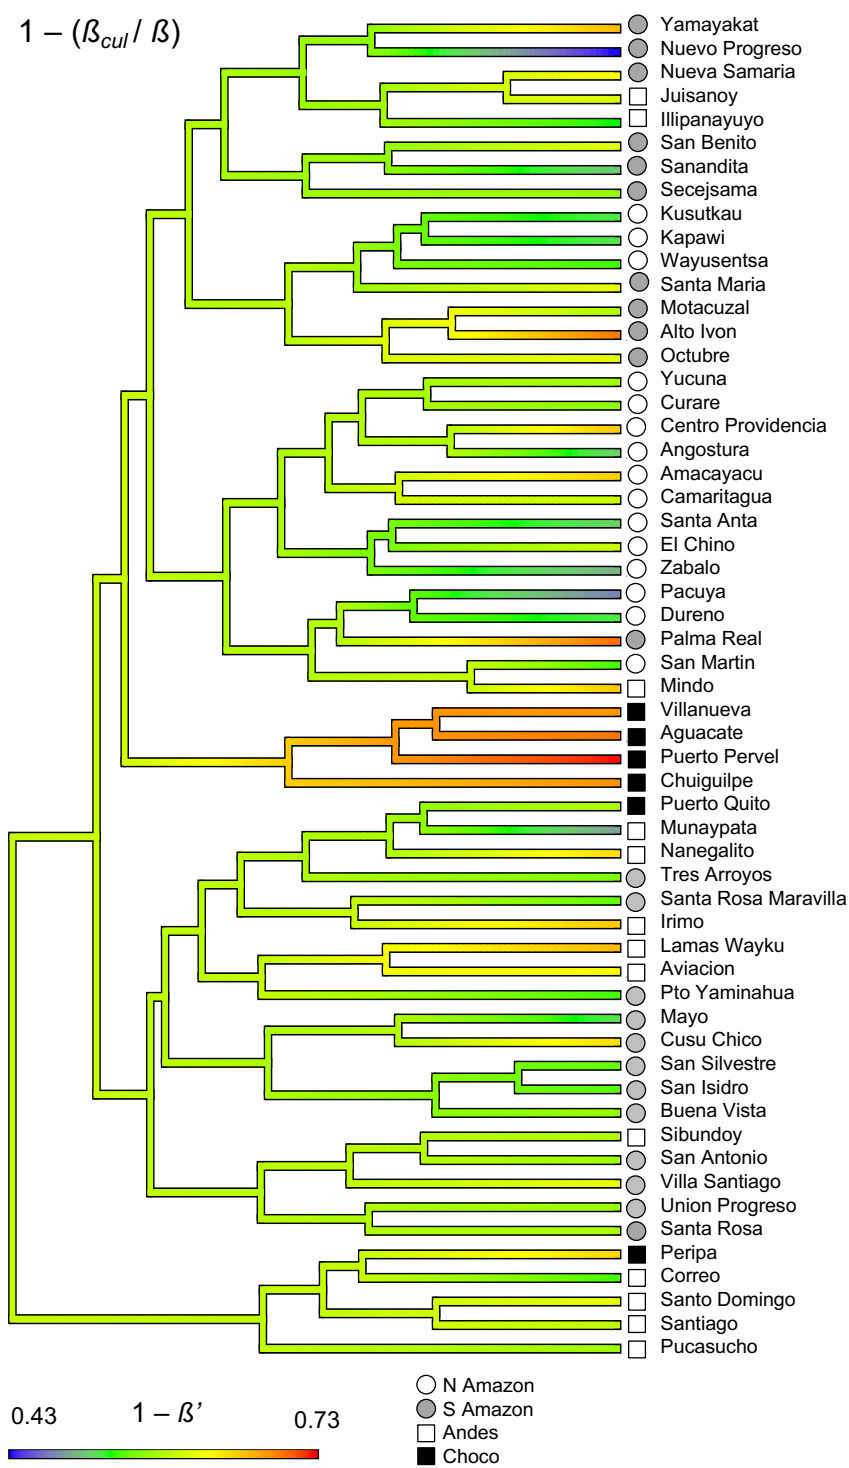

Fig. S3. Cluster classification showing the similarity between communities in their use of shared plants ($1 - \beta_{cul}/\beta$). Branch colors depict how much a given community resembles the metaweb ($1 - \beta'$). Names at branch tips are the 57 communities, and symbols show the geographic location of each community.

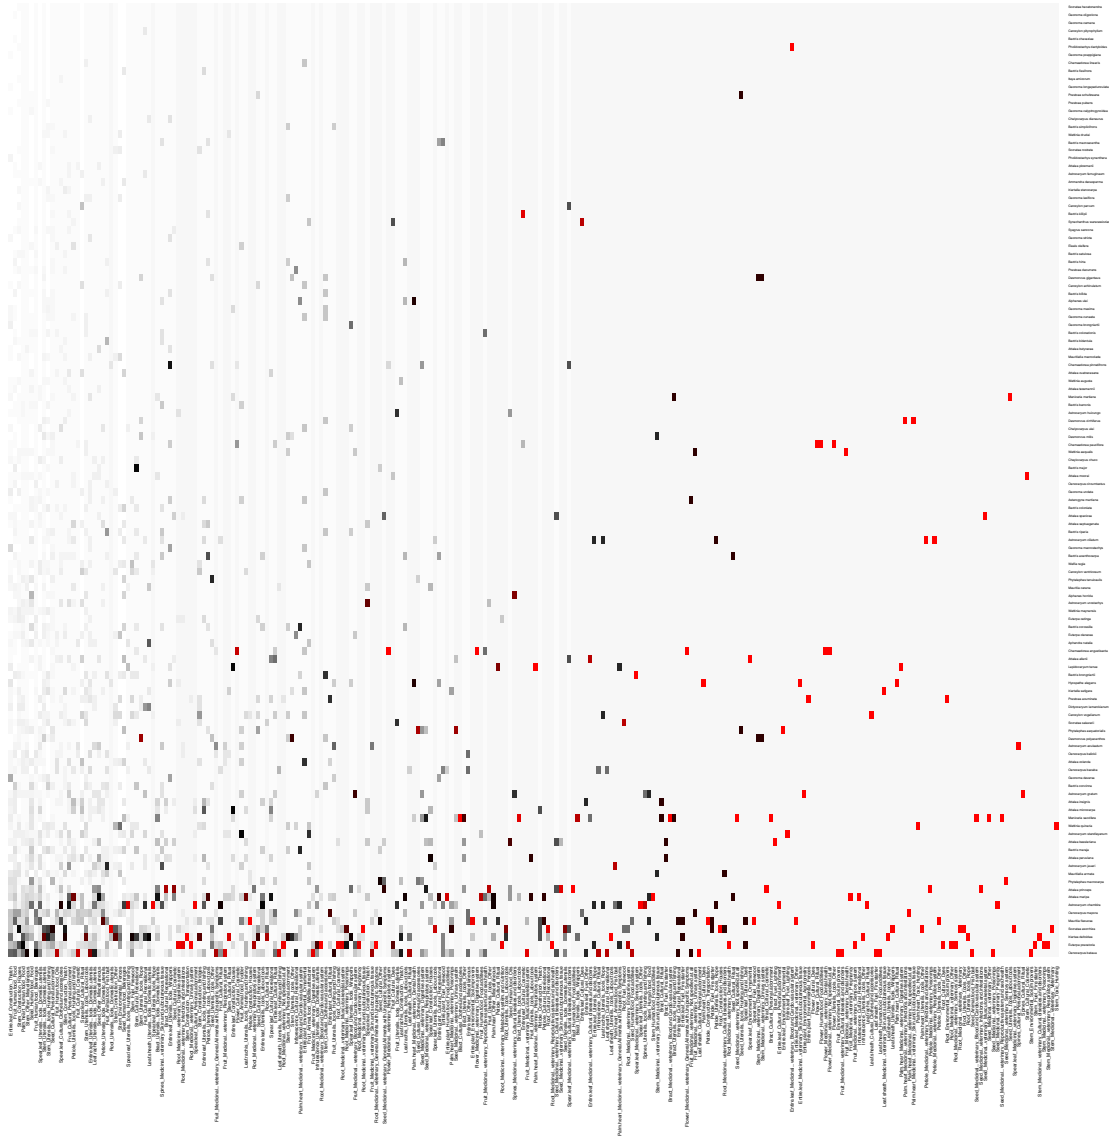

Fig. S4. Regional indigenous knowledge metaweb. Colors denote the number of communities that cite a given plant-service link, as in Fig. 1. The metaweb is made up of 120 plant species, 250 services, and 1743 links. For complete scientific names, see Table S3.

Table S2. Mantel test results between knowledge turnover measures in the 57 communities in tropical America and (A) logarithmically transformed geographic distance, (B) linguistic distance (where language was quantified using a binary presence/absence index) and (C) linguistic distance (where language was quantified as the fraction of speakers of each language per community). r_M is the Pearson correlation between matrices. Statistical significance of each correlation was established with a Monte Carlo permutation test using 999 random permutations, with $P < 0.001$ values shown in bold. β , differences in the knowledge networks for every pair of indigenous communities; β_{bio} , differences in the knowledge networks due to plants and services (node) turnover, β_{cul} , differences in the knowledge networks due to knowledge (link) turnover; β_{bio}/β , relative importance of biological heritage in explaining differences in the knowledge networks; β_{cul}/β , relative importance of cultural heritage in explaining differences in the knowledge networks. β' , difference of each local community to the indigenous knowledge metaweb.
