

Supporting Information

Application of an activity-based probe to determine proteolytic activity of cell surface cathepsin G by mass cytometry data acquisition

Fabian Gärtner¹, Uwe Knippschild¹, and Timo Burster^{2*}

¹Department of General and Visceral Surgery, Surgery Center; Ulm University Medical Center, 89081 Ulm, Germany; ²Department of Biology, School of Sciences and Humanities, Nazarbayev University, Kabanbay Batyr Ave., 53, Nur-Sultan, 010000, Kazakhstan Republic

*Corresponding author

S1: CatG activity is plotted as intensity values.

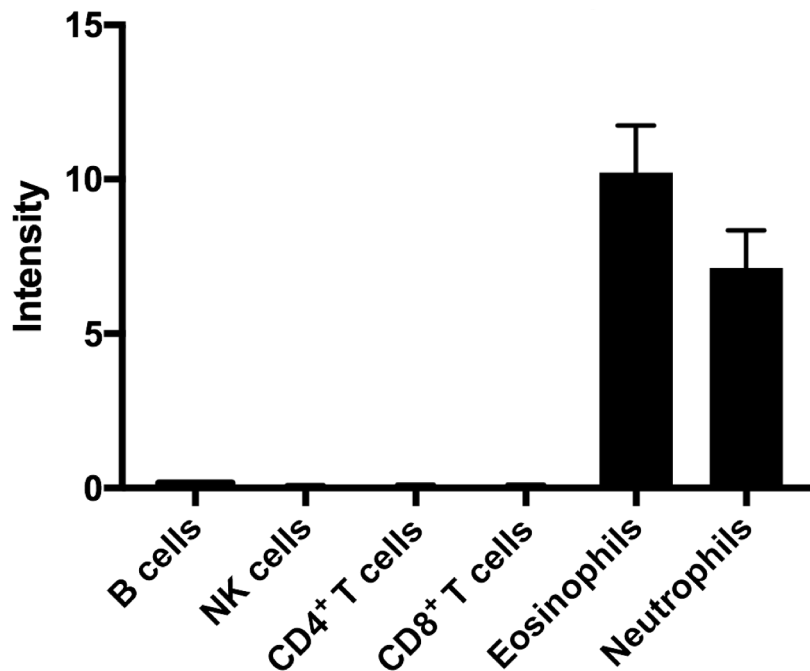

Figure S1: Cell surface CatG activity, detected on B cell, NK cells, CD4+ T cells, CD8+ T cells, eosinophils, and neutrophils, is summarized in the bar diagram and expressed as intensity.