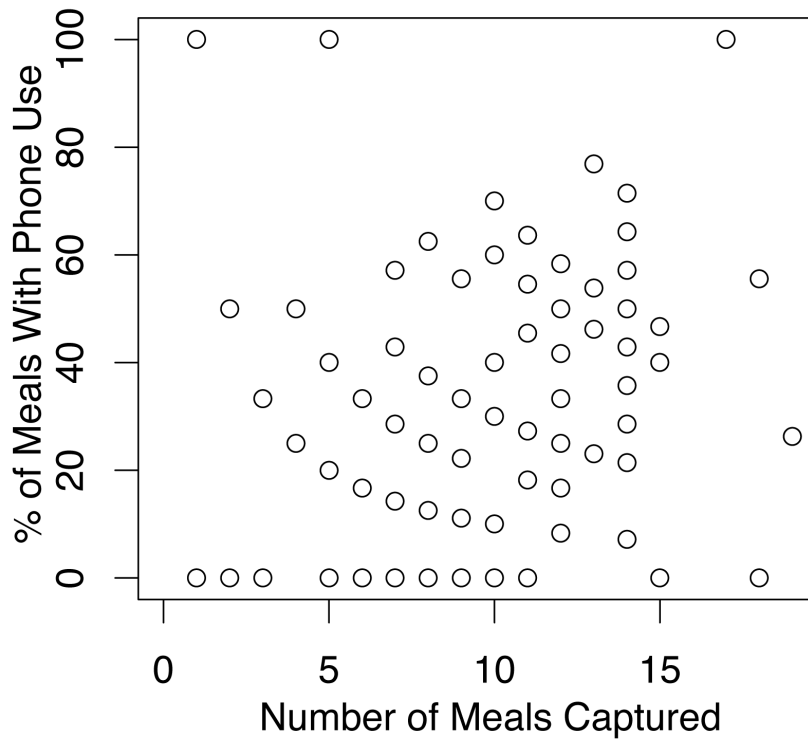

Figure S4. Scatterplot of meal-time phone use frequency against the number of meals captured.

When describing individual differences in meal-time phone use, one concern is that the measure of frequency may simply be an artefact of the number of meals recorded (through the experience sampling procedure). If this were the case, one would expect higher or more varied frequencies with fewer meals captured. However, Figure S4 does not suggest this trend, with chronic meal-time phone users observed regardless of the number of meals recorded.
