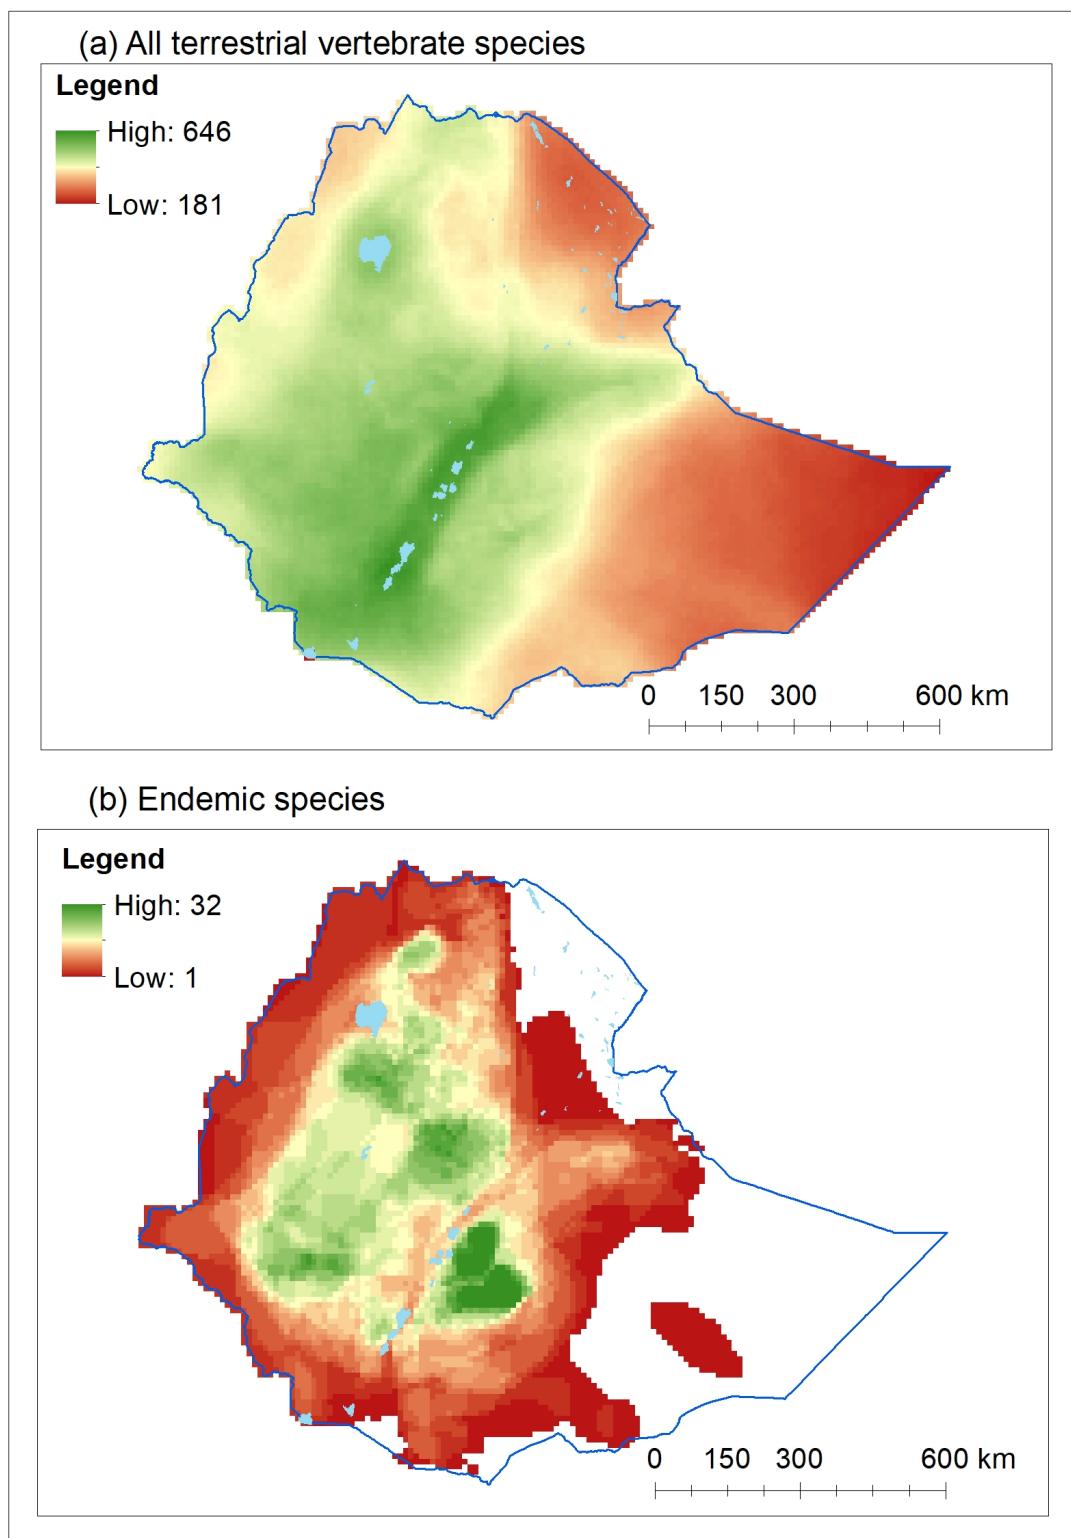

Fig. S1. Map of Ethiopia highlighting the distribution of (A) terrestrial vertebrates and (B) endemic terrestrial vertebrates across the country along gradients of high to low species richness. Modified with permission from (22)

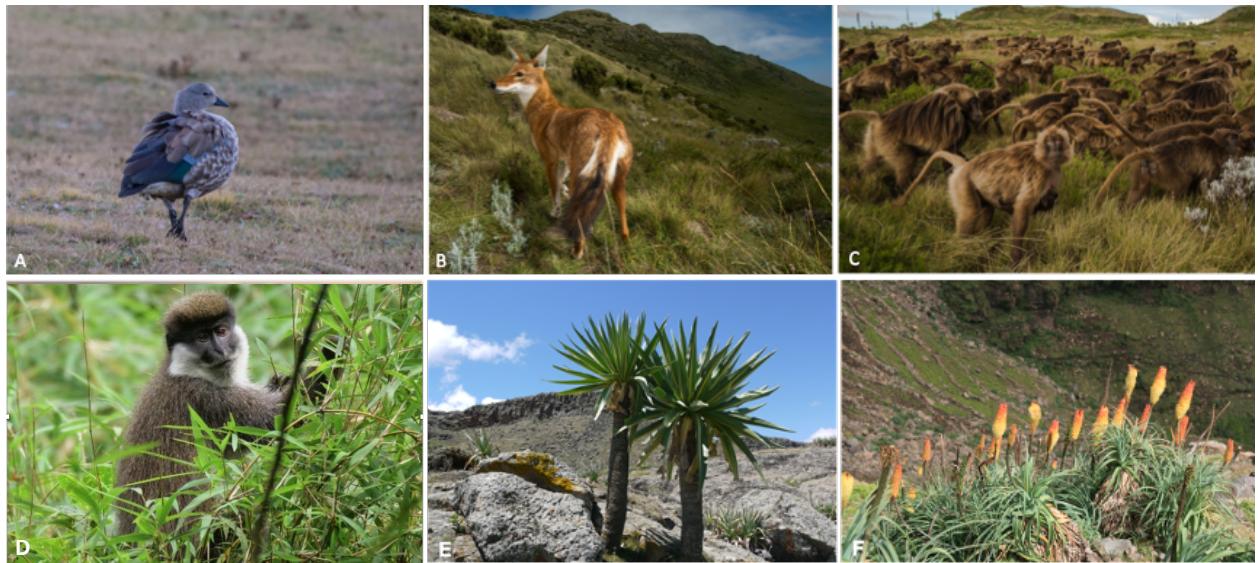

Fig. S2. Six flagship fauna and flora endemic to the Ethiopian Highlands. (A) The blue-winged goose (Aves: Anatidae: Cyanoochen cyanoptera) inhabits rivers, lakes, and Afroalpine grasslands, (B) the Ethiopian wolf (Mammalia; Canidae: Canis simensis) is the world's rarest canid and subsists mostly on rodents, (C) Geladas (Mammalia: Cercopithecidae: Theropithecus gelada) form complex multi-tiered societies and eat mostly graminoids, (D) Bale monkeys (Mammalia: Cercopithecidae: Chlorocebus djamdamensis) favour a diet of primarily montane bamboo, (E) Giant lobelias (Eudicots: Campanulaceae: Lobelia rhynchopetalum) are among the tallest plants on the Afroalpine grasslands where they occur, and (F) Torch lilies (Eudicots: Asphodelaceae: Kniphofia foliosa) are a perennial flowering herb native to Afroalpine grasslands. Kerby, Photo (D) by Addisu Mekonnen, Photo (E) by Abel Gizaw, and Photo (F) by Sebsebe Demissew.

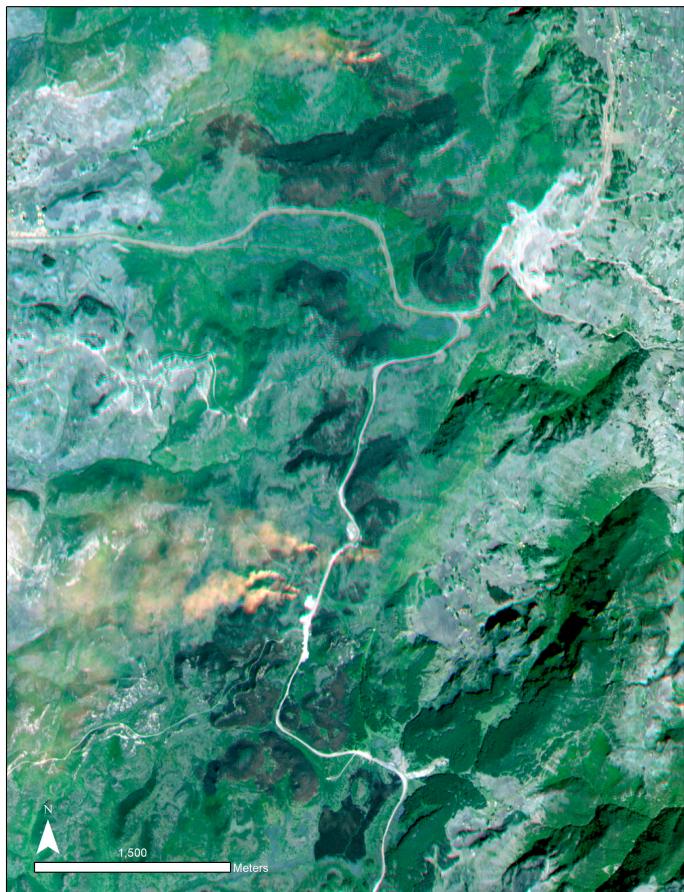

Fig. S3. Fires covering ~500 ha in Guassa Community Conservation Area ignited during a November 2021 battle from Ethiopia's ongoing civil war. In addition to the immediate threats stemming from the war, Ethiopian biodiversity faces long-term challenges resulting from rapid human population growth, land use change, and climate change.

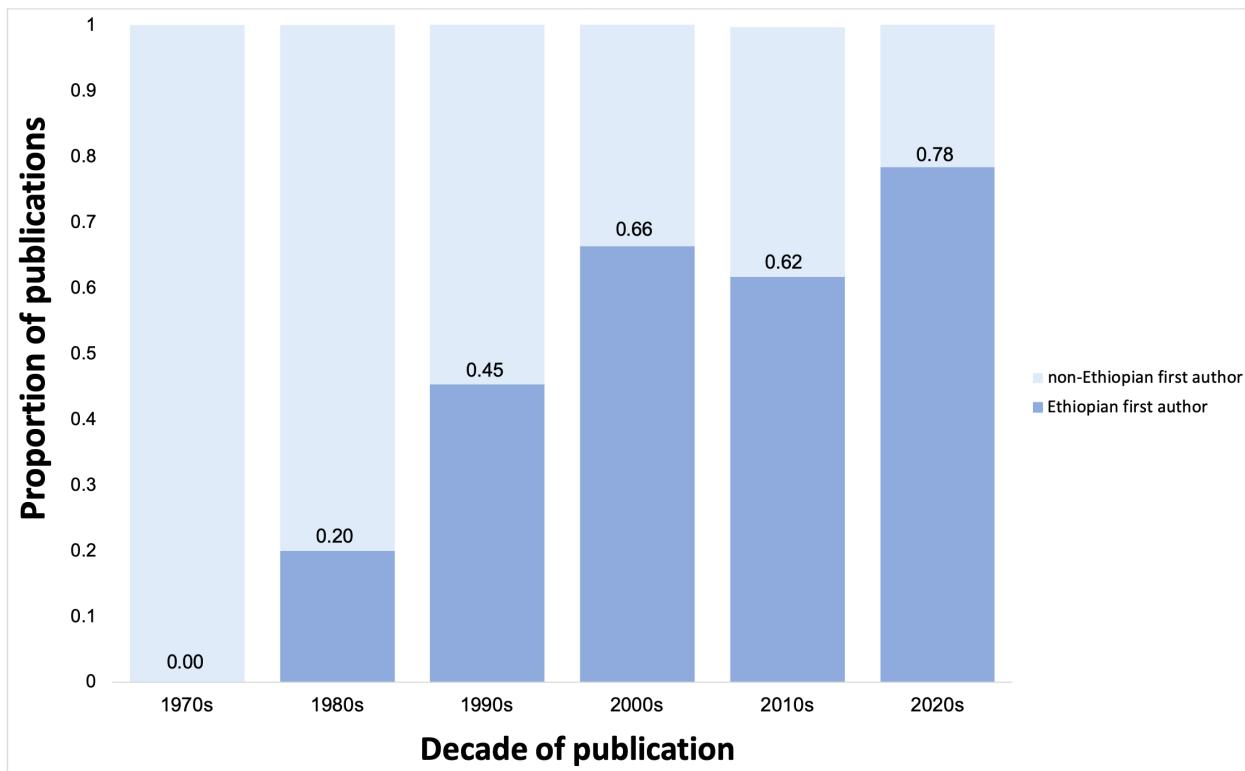

Fig. S4. Proportion of peer-reviewed journal articles (Web of Science search, September 15, 2022) on extant Ethiopian biodiversity (n=745) first-authored by Ethiopian vs. non-Ethiopian scientists by decade between the 1970s and 2020s. Title or author keywords search terms: “Ethiopia* AND ecology OR mammal* OR bird* OR plant* OR insect* OR reptile* OR fish* OR forest* OR invertebrate* OR new species OR amphibian* OR biodiversity”. Articles concerning extinct Ethiopian species and solely on crop plants or domestic animals were excluded from the analysis. Data from which this graph was generated are available in the accompanying data file “Data for Figure S4.xlsx”.
